Available online at www.sciencedirect.com
ScienceDirect
Journal of Forensic and Legal Medicine 15 (2008) 78–88
JOURNAL OF FORENSIC AND LEGAL MEDICINE
www.elsevier.com/jflm

Original Communication

Mechanism and strategies for preventing post-traumatic stress disorder in forensic workers responding to mass fatality incidents

Elizabeth Brondolo PhD [a,*], Robin Wellington PhD [a], Nisha Brady BA [a], Daniel Libby BA [a], Thomas J. Brondolo [b]

[a] St. John's University, Department of Psychology, 8000 Utopia Parkway, Jamaica, NY 11439, United States
[b] Brondolo Associates, LLC, New York, NY, United States

Received 25 August 2006; accepted 26 April 2007
Available online 20 July 2007

MFIs) expose medical examiners/coroners and associated staff to circumstances that may increase their risk stress disorder (PTSD). The aim of this paper is to provide guidance for efforts to prevent the development who respond to mass disasters. We present a model of the paths through which exposure to mass fatality symptoms in forensic and recovery workers. The model is based on current research in stress and coping of PTSD and is used to generate worksite intervention strategies to reduce the risk for PTSD.
FFLM. All rights reserved.

PTSD; Forensic workers; Recovery workers; Medical examiners; Job stress