ABSTRACT

The purpose of this study was to determine the communication patterns of Indonesian migrant worker mothers in Banyuajuh Village, Kamal District, Bangkalan Regency. This study uses a qualitative method with an instrumental type case study approach. The subject of the research is an Indonesian migrant worker mother who has children aged 4-5 years. The research subjects were 3 people. Data was collected using interviews and documentation methods. The research results show that: to achieve effective communication there are steps that must be carried out; 1) The understanding shown is good where the mother is able to convey messages in language that is easy for children to understand. 2) The pleasure shown by the child is quite good where mother and child are enthusiastic in communicating with each other. 3) The influence on attitude is good enough where there is a change in attitude after communicating. 4) Good social relations are shown quite well where mothers are able to establish relationships with children and family members. 5) The actions shown by the mother are good where the mother is able to order good actions for the child.
