

ABSTRACT

Ikhsani, Adam Muhammad. 130511100057. A Study of Madurese-type Reduplication in Indonesian Utterances Spoken by Sixth Graders of Daleman 01 Elementary School, Bangkalan. Thesis. English Study Program of the Faculty of Social and Cultural Sciences, University of Trunojoyo Madura. Advisor: Misnadin, S.S., M.A., Ph.D.

Reduplication is a morphological process where all or part of the basic word is repeated. This study investigates the reduplication in Indonesian influenced by Madurese-type reduplications used by sixth graders of Daleman 01 elementary school in Galis District of Bangkalan Regency. It is conducted to discover: (1) the types of Madurese reduplication which influence Indonesian utterances spoken by the sixth graders; and (2) the functions of those Madurese-type reduplications in those Indonesian utterances.

This study used descriptive qualitative method because it tried to recognize a linguistic phenomenon: the influence of Madurese-type reduplication in Indonesian utterances. Data were collected by means of interview.

This study found 21 Indonesian reduplications influenced by Madurese-type reduplications. Most of them were in the forms of first-syllable reduplication. It also showed that reduplication in Madurese does not always express the quantity of noun (plurality). Some reduplications were not purely reduplication alone because they were also influenced by affixation which then denotes particular meaning.

Keyword: Reduplication, Madurese-type Reduplication, Indonesian, Sixth Graders